ONE MAN'S BIG PULL.

SINCE the publication of the Industrial commission's statement, the act creating it has been the subject of much discussion. The particular phase of the discussion is the apparent laxity of the construction of the act, the large number of persons from Colorado employed by the commission, and its relation towards the mining inspector's office.

There are five members on the commission; three is sufficient to transact all business. They can deposit and draw out money at will; they are responsible, neither collectively or individually, to any one; they can dispose of the money as they see fit. There is no bond required of the commission for the faithful performance of their duty; the act does not even prescribe the formality of making a report.

The act is regarded as a political appendage to the mining inspector's office. The salient features so far as allegations go are that the mining inspector imported his relations and put them on the payroll. There are fourteen persons connected with or drawing salary from the commission, nine of whom and perhaps more are from Colorado, and most of them are traveling at the expense of the state, doing politics in every portion of it, to perpetuate Mr. Ryan and his friends in office in Nevada.

Of course Mr. Ryan is a member of the "safety first" and a great booster of this state. Yes, he boosted himself and his family into a good job, and took good care to give all the salaried positions to the imported article from Colorado.

The act was not intended to be used for the political benefit of any one, but rather for the benefit of the whole people of the state, and with proper amendments to it, there is no reason why it should not be a benefit. As it is now in practice, it is politically abused, and Mr. Ryan, his family and friends from Colorado are the chief beneficiaries.

HOW REFERENDUM WORKS.

THE voters of Oregon this year will have to study carefully no less than thirty-six referendum measures, if their purpose is to express an intelligent opinion on them at the polls. Can a majority of them be supposed to have time and other qualifications necessary to form such an opinion? If not, of what practical use is the referendum? If the majority of the voters must necessarily depend on the judgment of the party leaders, referendum is love's labor lost.

There are now eighteen referendum states and North Dakota and Wisconsin are expected to be added in the fall. And referendum measures grow from year to year. In Oregon two were offered in 1904; in 1906, eight; in 1908, sixteen; in 1910, thirty-two; in 1912, thirty-seven. We would think the voters would object to the extra work put upon them and leave to the legislature the task of making the laws.

Americans are great law-makers. Between 30,000 and 40,000 bills are generally introduced at an ordinary session of congress. They cover every conceivable subject of regulation of the ordinary domestic affairs of the people. The state legislatures are almost as busy as congress, and added to these are the activities of city councils and a multitude of commissions. What would the voter do if he were called upon to exercise an opinion on all legislative measures? Even lawyers find it difficult to keep even with the rapid progress of law-making. To the ordinary citizen it is impossible.

The founders of the republic were wise when they instituted representative government. The tendency to legislate at the polls is not in accord with their ideas of popular government. They knew that those who give their time to the study of public questions and listen to arguments on both sides by authorities are better equipped to judge of the wisdom of a measure than those who have but little time to give to study and investigation.

SUFFRAGE AND MARRIAGE.

THE National Woman's Equal Suffrage association has been driven to the point of resolving that suffragettes are not opposed to the marriage vow and denounce as a gross slander that equal suffrage means loose morals. This does not fit well with the statements of suffrage leaders that have gone without contradiction. Ella Key and Dora Marsden look upon woman suffrage as part of the social revolution for which they are working and their expressions cannot be separated from the sentiments of the leaders of the movement seeking to confer the ballot on the women of the nation.

Dora Marsden, in a pamphlet issued by the National American Woman Suffrage Association, says: "The cult of the suffragette takes its stand upon the weakness and dejectedness of the conditions of women. Therefore, give them the means wherewith they may be protected. Those of the cult of the free woman, however, while granting this in part, would go on to say, 'in spite of opposition, we feel within us the stirrings of new powers and of growing strength.' The free woman's concern is to see to it that she shall be in a position to bear children if she wants them, without soliciting maintenance from any man, whoever he may be." These feminists are the logical suffragists, who have the intellectual honesty to declare that you cannot change everything and leave everything unchanged; who seek the "social revolution," and acknowledge the means by which they will bring it about, and these means include, although they may not stop at, woman suffrage.
